In terms of its design the Merry-Go-Round bank has everything going for it. The composition is simple, straightforward and dazzling. The color palette is varied, bright and cheerful. Furthermore, the dynamic circling motion of the carousel canopy, with its suspended exotic animals and children passengers, is truly satisfying to behold. And finally, for the ears, a crisp chiming bell sound accompanies each turn of the crank. Few examples of this bank have survived into modern times unbroken, un-repaired and completely original, as is this one.

Hen and Chicks Bank

In the late 1890's, a period often referred to as the Gilded Age, J. & E. Stevens produced a very limited number of banks finished with a burnished gold surface. These dazzling wonderments needed to be ordered directly from the Stevens Company as a special commission. They were difficult to produce and this resulted in a high cost. Records obtained by Louis Hertz in the 1940's revealed that the Stevens Company charged nearly triple for a bank finished in this manner rather than a conventional painted finish. Apparently, few of these "specialty pieces" were ever produced because only a scant few have survived into modern times. To date, burnished gold specimens of the Owl Turns Head, Eagle & Eaglets, Chief Big Moon and William Tell have been discovered. We believe this to be the first burnished example of the Hen & Chicks Bank to ever come to light. This presents a great opportunity to acquire an extremely rare and unusual toy bank.

Small Standing Rabbit

By Lockwood Mfg. Co. Connecticut - Circa 1880 Excellent Condition - $2250 (141)

Over the course of twenty years, bank collector Mark Haber made perhaps two dozen examples of the Bull and Bear Bank. The ultra fine quality of this specimen suggests an early production date in the 1940's. Haber's later output of the Bull and Bear is frequently characterized by very poorly cast bases with holes in them. This one is truly spectacular.

This scarce version of the toy uses a cast lead jockey's head and incorporates a realistic whipping action to simulate the horse's galloping.

This exquisite mechanical tin toy represents the top of the line for the production run of the Ives, Blakeslee Company.

American Clockwork Toys

Jerome Secor's Black Musicians

Jerome Secor made a fortune in the sewing machine business before the Civil War. Sadly, through a series of significant misfortunes, he found himself a broken, bankrupt and dispirited man by war's end. Some short while later, he relocated his family to Bridgeport, Connecticut, where, as luck would have it, he bought the home that sat directly beside that of Edward Ives, the renowned toy manufacturer. Ives took up the cause of his new neighbor, encouraging Secor to design a series of complex mechanical toys that used inexpensive brass mechanisms. In this way, one of the greatest partnerships in the history of toy manufacturing was formed. The Banjo Player, Tambourine Player and Bones Player are three iconic representations of their collaboration. These figures demonstrate a very remarkable range of motions that achieve an extraordinary sense of realism. Movements include tapping feet, strumming hands, shaking hands and heads that shift from left to right and back. Secor also produced a black lady chorister known as Sister Lucinda and the much sought after Freedman's Bank. These toys were exceedingly costly. The Freedman's Bank was a whopping $7.50, equivalent to three weeks of wages in that period. As a result, very few of these magnificent wonderments were ever produced and brought to market. This offering of the trio of black musicians represents a rare chance to acquire these toys in one fell swoop.

Mechanical jig dancer toys stomp their feet and tap their shoes upon wood or tin platforms. These animated novelties provided countless hours of joy for children in post bellum America. The Ives Company, along with Automatic Toy Works, offered these toys with a vast array of figures. Even today, they never cease to deliver a big dose of smiles and happiness to the beholder. When the mechanism is wound to its maximum potential, these toys often operate for two minutes or more.

Missing Link Jigger By Ives, Blakeslee & Company Bridgeport, CT - Circa 1880 Pristine Condition - $2450 (156)

Young Girl on Swing By the Ives, Blakeslee Company Bridgeport, CT - Circa 1880 Pristine Condition - $8500 (161)

To effectuate the movement of the girl gliding back and forth on her swing, the designers at the Ives Company employed a heavy spherical counterweight.

In his seminal book American Clockwork Toys, Blair Whitton identified this toy as being one of the most rare and desirable in the field. At the present time, there are only three extant specimens in the world. When the toy is in operation, the boys rise up and down on their seesaw; the fulcrum is the arched roofline of the house. All the while, grandma's head begins to emerge from the chimney to keep a watchful eye on her precious grandsons. The imagery for this toy may seem quite odd, and yet, in terms of its graphic appeal, it's a genuine showstopper.

Cast Iron Horse Drawn

Scarce Small Hook & Ladder

Two Horse Water Tower

Urban development went into high gear at the close of the 19th century. In many cases, new buildings were built to a much higher elevation. The introduction of the aerial water tower, which could shoot its powerful spray high up into the sky, presumably accommodated the safety demands of this new skyline.

Cast Iron Horse Drawn

In an era known as the Gilded Age, this toy would have looked liked a gleaming piece of silver when it was first presented to its lucky recipient. Rather astonishingly, all seven firemen are original.

All seven policemen are incorrectly replaced. In actuality, this unusual patrol wagon should be populated with firemen. John Olshevski's book on cast iron horse drawn fire vehicles illustrates a hook and ladder toy with an identical team of horses.

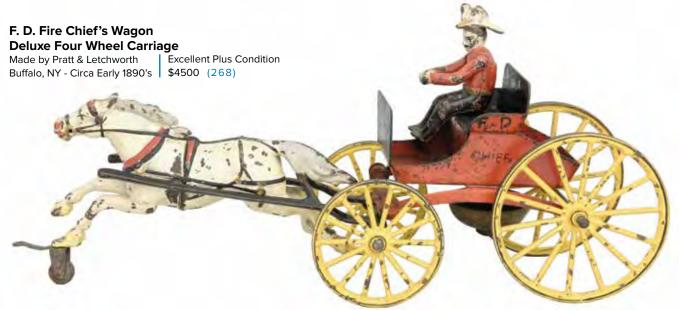

Antique toy enthusiasts are always on the lookout for police patrol wagons. As a form, they are seen as very rare and desirable. This extraordinary beauty represents one of the most unusual horse drawn toys ever created. It deploys articulated action that effectuates a sort of pacing movement for the black prisoner held in custody in the paddy wagon. At this time, there are only three known examples of this sensational toy.

Hose Reel Made by Ives Blakeslee Company Bridgeport, CT - Circa Mid 1880's Excellent Condition $2850 (267)

This forms part of the set of five different fire apparatus toys that Ives produced under the brand name "Phoenix Series". Louis Hertz thought they were so exceptional in quality that he called them the Royal Flush of fire toys.

Cast Iron Fire Toy

The Burning Building By F. W. Carpenter and Co. Harrison, NY Circa 1890

Excellent Condition $34,500 (270)

Carpenter's iconic child's toy depicting a building ablaze with ladies in distress is undeniably the most fascinating and appealing toy created in the late nineteenth century. Carpenter offered this product in three different formats. This specimen represents the deluxe expanded two story version complete with two climbing fireman on ladders, a pivoting hose man on the ground and two helpless female victims that require rescuing.

To operate the toy, start by pulling the cord attached to the ladder on the right. Watch as the brave fireman rushes up the rungs of the ladder. When he reaches the roof, where one lady waits nervously, his hand tips a tray that causes her to roll down into the elevator shaft on the left. The weight of this figure going downwards causes the second fireman to ascend his ladder and rescue the woman on the balcony where flames are about to engulf her. When the lady from the roof rolls out the side of the building, the second fireman and the lady from the balcony now safely descend. Simultaneous to all of this frenetic action, the fireman with the hose on the ground pivots from the right to the left side of the building. That this toy even works is an absolute miracle that defies engineering design.

The Sack of Troy from The Malcolm Forbes Collection

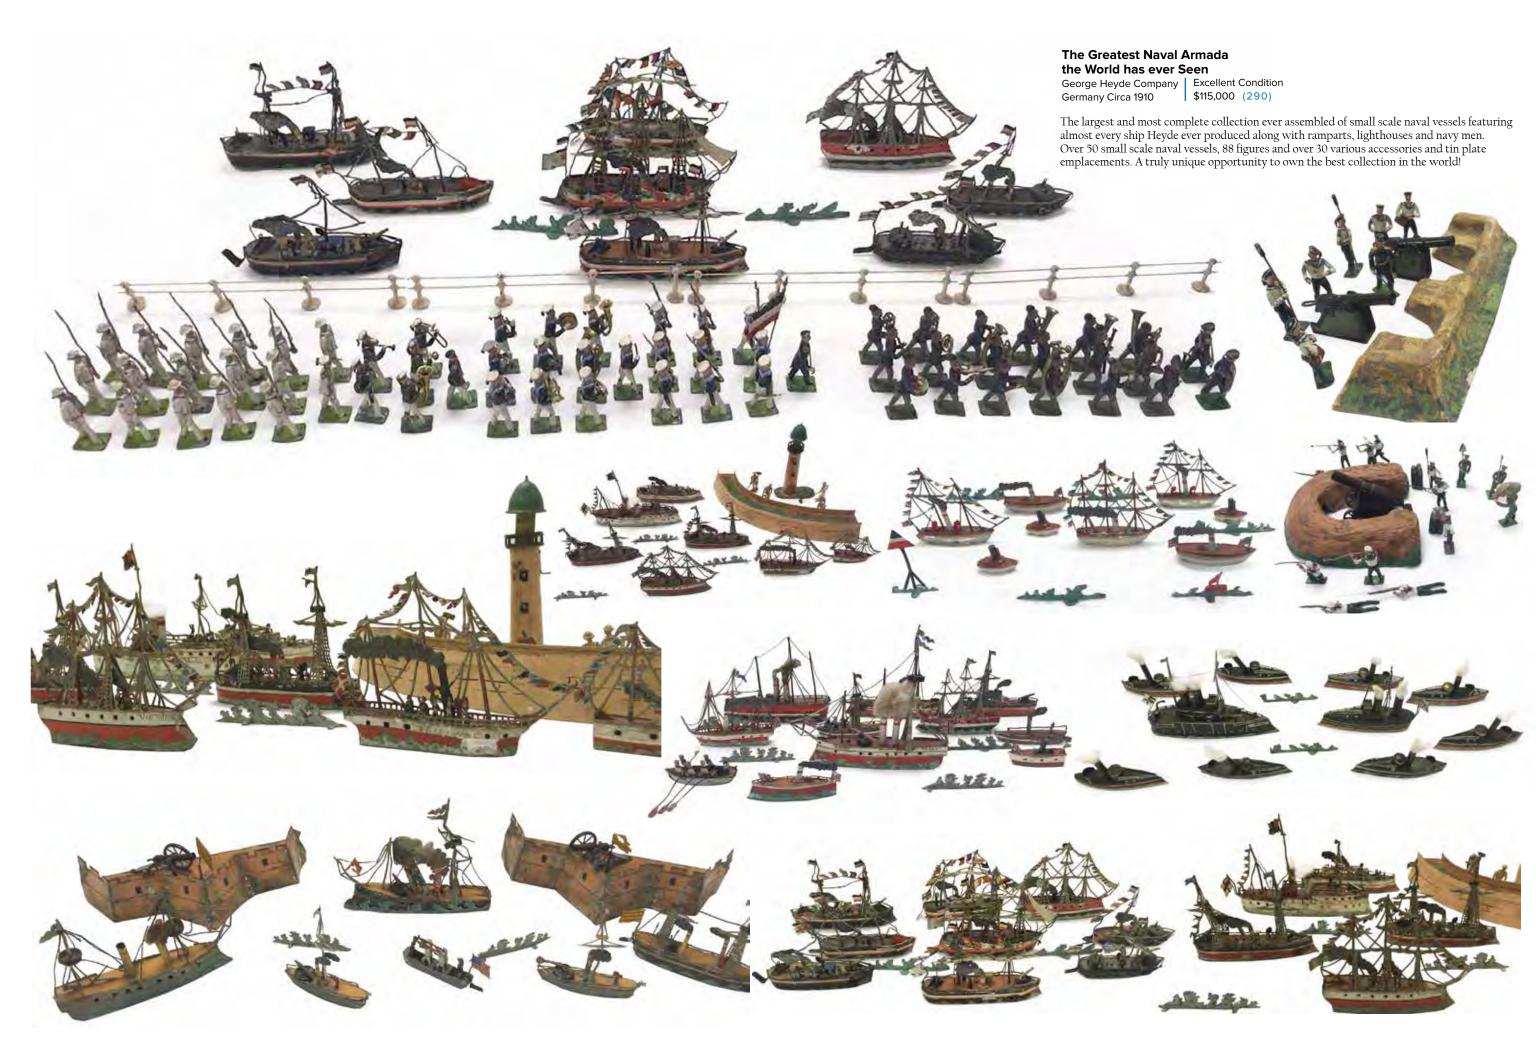

George Heyde Company and Georg Heinrichsen | Excellent Plus Condition Germany Circa 1910 50mm | $47,500 (289)

A chance to own the iconic set of toy soldiers from the world's most iconic collector Malcolm Forbes. In December 2010, Sotheby's auctioned the final part of Malcolm Forbes legendary toy soldier collection. The dioramas and sets in the auction were on display for almost 30 years on the first floor of the Forbes Magazine building, 5th Ave, New York. Among these was the Sack of Troy, one of Heyde's most spectacular creations. Troy was one of Malcolm Forbe's favorite sets and to house it museum curators constructed a large Plexiglas case 48" long by 18" high by 16" deep. Contained within are two tiered wooden platforms, one displaying a complete Heyde Sack of Troy and the other showcasing a rare set of Heinrichsen flats representing Greek gods and warriors based on the legends of Homer.
